Aviva Olsavsky, MD | avivaOLS@CUanschutz.edu | University of Colorado, CO

Brief Bio: Dr. Olsavsky is an Assistant Professor at the University of Colorado School of Medicine within the Department of Psychiatry with joint appointment in Obstetrics and Gynecology within the Divisions of Child and Adolescent and Addictions Psychiatry. After receiving her BA from Harvard College, Dr. Olsavsky completed medical school and residency at UCLA, child psychiatry training at Children’s Colorado, and NIMH and CU research fellowships. Her work in the SIMBA (Stress in Moms and Babies) lab explores how mothers’ stressful early experiences and substance use during the perinatal period impact maternal processing of infant cues using behavioral and neuroimaging methods. Since adverse early experiences and substance use are common, understanding how these phenomena impact brain structure and function in the brains of perinatal people will help us design interventions to help parents and their children, impacting the mental health and development of two generations at once. Clinically, Dr. Olsavsky provides care for perinatal psychiatric and substance use disorders within two integrated care clinics, including the Young Mothers Clinic at Children’s Hospital and the PROMISE Clinic within Obstetrics and Gynecology at UC Health.
