

RESEARCH STUDIES AT CHILDREN'S NATIONAL HEALTH SYSTEM

Adelaide Robb, M.D., and a team of psychiatrists and psychologists at Children's National Health System are conducting research studies with children and adolescents ages 6-17. Current studies include treatments for depression for ages 7-17 and ADHD with symptoms of impulsive aggression for ages 6-12. Good candidates include patients seeking new treatment options or those who may not have insurance. All study-related treatments and evaluations are free of cost and families will receive compensation for time and travel while participating. Patient privacy and confidentiality is assured. Please have patients contact Sky Cardwell or Zander Dick at 202-476-6067 for more information.
